As Carlo Lancellotti notes in his introduction to The Crisis of Modernity, Del Noce himself was initially tempted by the idea. However, as Del Noce systematically examined Marxist thought, he came to reject a Catholic-Marxist alliance for the same reason he rejected a Catholic-Fascist alliance: the Marxist-Leninist idea that violence is justified in pursuit of the revolution is incompatible with Christianity.

Marxism and the Crisis of Modernity - Bastion Magazine
According to Del Noce, philosophers and historians had responded to modernity in three different theoretical ways: 1) the " anti-modern " approach/attitude or the " restoration ", which he also defined as the " archeological utopia " of the past (for example, De Maistre); 2) the " ultramodern " attitude (the " utopia of the future "), which eagerly embraces all modernist developments, including the process of secularization and its attempt at the " novum " ; 3) the compromising ...
