Straw Dogs Thoughts Humans Animals In Straw Dogs, Gray voices his criticism of the philosophy of humanism, which is based on the belief of free will and implies that mankind, by using science and the teachings of Enlightenment, can create a society in which no one has to suffer and no one is oppressed or put at a disadvantage.

~~Straw Dogs Thoughts Humans Animals Gray~~

In Straw Dogs, he argues that the idea that humans are self-determining agents does not pass the acid test of experience. Those Darwinist thinkers who believe humans can take charge of their own destiny to prevent environmental degradation are, in this view, not naturalists, but apostles of humanism.
